Worshipful Masters Message

"Every human being has a claim upon your kind offices."

This is not to be taken lightly. Daily we make decisions interacting with people. How one takes this exhortation and applies it is up to us individually. It does affect us collectively. How we are seen on the whole when dealing with others will be perceived many different ways.

Remembering the words "kind offices" will determine the perception.

How one speaks to and treats the person clearing tables at a favored restaurant or the person filling one's fuel tank will be an indicator not only of the character of the individual but as a group of people committed to a common goal. A reality I faced at a very early time in my working days was the understanding that employment would always be based on the previous work for any given situation. One messed up goal meant the difference of a paycheck over not having one. No matter what, kind words and works determine the existence of any organization. Justifying the claim is the next step. How it is justified or denied has to be met with justice and candor. That decision cannot be arbitrary. The situation has merit or it does not. Experience would be the best guide. It must be coupled with good intentions. For the betterment of humanity. Good perceptions will then follow.
